A Capsule History of New Ipswich, NH

The physical characteristics of New Ipswich made it an ideal location for industry in the early days of its settlement. Hills, mountains and valleys with riverlets emptying into the larger Souhegan River provided a surplus of water power to run the many saw mills, grist mills, starch mills and textile manufacturing plants in the Town's past. Today, the only textile mill still in existence and operational is the Warwick Mill, which is now call Warwick Mills. This mill is notable as an example of fine brick work, as well as being the site of the second textile manufacturing plant established in New Hampshire.

New Ipswich is a town of villages. Wilder Village to the west on Route 124 was the site of the Wilder Chair Factory from 1810 to 1869 and was home to the famous and much sought after Wilder Chair. Continuing toward the Center Village is Davis Village and then to the South is Smith Village. To the East of Center Village are Bank Village and High Bridge. During the past century, each of these villages was a busy community with its own industry. Today these villages are mainly residential.

The first permanent settler in this town was Abijah Foster, who came here from Ipswich, Massachusetts in 1735. His son, Ebenezer, was the first child born in New Ipswich.

The names of Kidder, Farrar, Preston, Appleton and Wheeler, among others, are well known in New Ipswich as being early settlers with many of their descendants still living here. However, there are now many Finnish names in the New Ipswich records. At the turn of the century, Finnish families from Fitchburg, Massachusetts began arriving to establish farms or continue farming on older farms. As the Finnish population increased, others came from Finland to settle here.

The Barrett Mansion, 23 Main Street, built c. 1800, is noteworthy as an example of late 18th century architecture in the grand manner. The house is owned by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities of New Hampshire. It is open to the public June through October 15, the Second and Fourth Saturday of the month; guided tours are offered on the hour, 11am-4pm. Tours are free for New Ipswich residents. Contact the Barrett House Site Manager at 860-928-4074.

The old burial ground, established in 1753 and the Town Pound beside it are of interest. They are located off Porter Hill Road.

New Ipswich Academy, later known as New Ipswich Appleton Academy, was incorporated in 1789. It was one of the oldest academies in New Hampshire, second only to Phillips Academy at Exeter and was established as a result of the many educated families in this and neighboring towns desiring certain education advantages for their sons. Appleton Academy continued to serve New Ipswich and surrounding towns as a high school until 1966, when the Mascenic School District was formed and the building was sold for use as a private boy's school. Although the academy has been located at different places in town, the existing building is on the same site as the building built in 1853 which burned in 1941. In 1977, the School District purchased the Academy and was used as an elementary school until the new school was finished in 2011.

In 2007, through volunteer efforts, the town developed its first website, www.NewIpswichNH.gov where residents can get direct information of the town functions. A newly designed website and a Town Facebook page are being launched in 2018.

In 2017, New Ipswich was the first town in New Hampshire to be declared a Purple Heart Community. August 7 is Purple Heart day. Businesses, organizations and residents are encouraged to display the American Flag and other public expressions in honor of our Purple Heart recipients.
