The JV reported that someone called claiming to be from Publisher Clearinghouse and told him he was a winner of a cash prize. The JV told the caller that he was not interested in the prize or giving out his personal information. The caller became frustrated and threatened the JV over the phone. The JV was concerned about the potential scam and the threat made. The JV identified the caller as Dave and supplied two phone number that he had called from. NIPD called both numbers and they were out of service.  The JV advised that he was safe at home with his grandmother and his parents were to return later in the evening. I spoke with the JV's grandmother and she told me that she had not heard the conversation between the caller and the JV. I asked if she felt the JV was safe and she advised that he was. I asked for a return phone call from the JV's parents once they arrived home.  I advised the JV that it was possibly a scam and the caller likely became frustrated once he refused to participate or share his information.  A short time later the JV's father called NIPD and thanked the department for checking on his son. The parent said he would speak to the JV about potential scams and this ended our conversation.
